

University of Victoria

Cambodia's Long-Lost Rock and Roll Culture and Cosmopolitanism

Jay Choi, supported by Dr. Tri Phuong

Faculty of Humanities, Department of Pacific and Asian Studies and Indigenous Studies

Figure 2. Don't Think I've Forgotten: Cambodia's Lost Rock and Roll

Figure 3. 17 April 1975: A Lon Nol soldier flees with his guitar during the Fall of Phnom Penh. Photo by Roland Neveu

Figure 4. Baksey Cham Krong, Cambodia's first rock and roll band

Figure 5. The Killing Field and Toul Sleng Genocide Museum

Acknowledgments

I want to thank my supervisor Dr. Tri Phuong, who influenced me in understanding cosmopolitanism as bridging contemporaneous cultures and serving as a temporal bridge between the past and present and a spiritual connection between the homeland and those displaced by wars.

Your encouragement and support helped me to stay motivated. Thank you for your feedback and guidance throughout the process of writing and creating this project. គំរូ អរគុណ!

This research was supported by the Jamie Cassels Undergraduate Research Award, University of Victoria. March 7, 2023

Scan for references

